Special thanks to the

W.K. Kellogg Foundation

for its generous and

International Leadership Association.
Greetings!

On behalf of the International Leadership Association’s board, staff and conference planning committee, we are pleased to welcome you to the 2001 ILA conference.

The tragic events of September 11 in the United States and continuing conflicts in many other places around the world serve as painful reminders of the critical importance of the work we do to build effective global leadership. Of course, we must do more. We are asking that you spend some time at this conference considering how we can emerge with insights, knowledge and practices that will help bring positive change to our world.

To that end, we have added a keynote panel on “Leadership in Times of Crisis,” to an already rich array of sessions. Keynote speaker Meg Wheatly, noted author, president of the Berkana Institute and leadership consultant for organizations and companies worldwide, promises to enlighten us. And a plenary session presenting major new findings from the Global Leadership and Organizational Behavior Effectiveness Research Project will surely guide our efforts.

As we continue to evolve as an association, you will notice new additions to the conference. The Scholarship Roundtable is joined by a new series of pre-conference workshops offered by some of the nation’s top leadership experts. And we are very excited about our “bookends” to the conference. To open the conference, Michael Jones and Kathleen Allen will facilitate a World Knowledge Café designed to bring us together to explore some of the toughest leadership questions. To close the conference, we will celebrate with music by pianist Michael Jones and poetry by Judy Sorum Brown, who will serve as our “conference weaver,” reflecting the insights and knowledge gained over these three days.

We would like to thank the W.K Kellogg Foundation, especially Rick Foster, for continued, generous support of the ILA. Special thanks to all those who worked so hard to make the conference a success—those who reviewed session proposals, our presenters and keynoters and our Miami committee. And we are most grateful for Shelly Wilsey, ILA program director, who—with help from staff at the Academy of Leadership—managed the details and nuances of putting together this conference.

In this age of cell phones, teleconferences and the Internet, many thought that the need for face-to-face meetings would decrease. Au contraire! The human spirit requires—in fact demands—time for people to come together, to talk, to exchange ideas, and to challenge and support one another. We hope you find this time of coming together as an ILA community a rich and inspiring experience.

What Is the Leadership the World Needs Now?
Margaret Wheatley

Margaret Wheatley is president of the Berkana Institute, a charitable global foundation. She has been a consultant for a variety of organizations on five continents, ranging from Fortune 500 corporations and the U.S. Army to religious orders and the Girl Scouts. Dr. Wheatley is the author of Leadership and the New Science and, with Myron Kellner-Rogers, A Simpler Way, as well as numerous articles on management and self-organization. She writes, teaches and speaks about radically new practices and ideas for organizing in chaotic times.

ILA Board Meeting

Optional Stiltsville/Key Biscayne Boat Tour (T2) Starts at Waters Edge, Bayside. Allow 10 minutes to get there. Look for Historical Museum of South Florida banner.

Session types

Panel: Presentations or discussions by several people with contrasting or complementary points of view, followed by audience questions and discussion.

Workshop: A demonstration, application, and/or session that requires significant audience participation.

Roundtable: Facilitated small-group discussions on a particular leadership practice, research topic or program challenge. After a brief presentation, the facilitator hears perspectives, ideas and feedback from conference participants.

Paper: Presentation of a written product documenting research, presenting theories, or arguing a particular point of view. At ILA’s discretion, a single paper may comprise an entire session or be assigned to share a session as a panel.

Poster Session: A visual display of a program, paper or project set up in an exhibit space throughout the conference but only staffed by the creator during a brief specific period.
Workshops*

Brickell Prefunction
Servant-leadership: A Foundation for Effective Change
John Noble & Ralph Lewis, Greenleaf Center for Servant-Leadership UK
Learn more about the principles of servant-leadership and how organizations committed to servant-leadership work, examine your own leadership styles and beliefs, and find out how your service to others enables you to serve yourself and grow.

Brickell North
Comprehensive Leadership Education Program Development
Dennis Roberts, Miami University of Ohio
Designed for those responsible for developing or revamping leadership education programs, this session will explore how your campus might approach the redesign or creation of a truly comprehensive program that transcends targeted, elite student populations. While practical tips and strategies will be included, the presentation is grounded in the emerging leadership theory, and it is related to the emergent twenty-five year history of comprehensive leadership development in higher education.

Brickell Center
The Inner Work of the Leader: Habits of the Mind and Practices of the Heart
Kathryn Tyler Scott, Trustee Leadership Development
This session is for leaders and volunteers in every sector who want to increase their leadership skills and their capacity to manage complex change. Participants will be introduced to a model that provides a framework for a deeper understanding of their leadership roles, increasing self awareness (a key element of emotional intelligence), and the capacity to influence others.

Brickell South
Exploring Models of Leadership
Michael H. Hoppe, Center for Creative Leadership
This session is designed to help those in leadership development and/or education surface, explore, understand and appreciate their own and others deeply ingrained notions of leadership. Three tools—The Visual Explorer, The Five-Star Model, and the “More Than/Less Than” Model—will be practiced, discussed and evaluated.

* Registration required.
Bruce Avolio, State University of New York at Binghamton
This roundtable discussion will address how leadership development is conducted on a global basis, and what must be done to sustain leadership growth over time. Dr. Avolio will discuss the role of evaluation and advanced information technology (AIT). Such technology can be used to help support continuous leadership development over time and when the leader and follower need it most—at the point of executing leadership in an organization, community, or society.

Gill Robinson Hickman, Jepson School of Leadership, University of Richmond and Georgia Sorenson, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland
This roundtable discussion addresses invisible leadership—the kind that goes unnoticed, unmeasured and unacknowledged, yet produces great change. Components of invisible leadership include commitment to the great public values, empathy for and trust in others, and a lack of need for personal credit. Invisible leadership may also have unintended costs—some surprising—that will be addressed in this roundtable discussion.

Douglas A. Hicks, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond
The war on terrorism presents the clearest challenge yet to leaders who would protect an open, democratic society, including religious freedom. Although this recent challenge to political leadership is unprecedented in scope, it must be understood within the wider contexts of a global society and increasing religious diversity in the United States. Dr. Hicks’s current research project builds a framework of “respectful pluralism” that outlines how leaders can respond to religious diversity in politics and the workplace.

Barbara Kellerman, Center for Public Leadership, Kennedy School, Harvard University
In this discussion, Dr. Kellerman undertakes to address the concept of “bad leadership.” For a variety of reasons, the field of Leadership Studies has chosen to accentuate the positive and nearly eliminate the negative. Contemporary studies of leadership focus largely on leadership as a dynamic that can be broadly labeled as benign. Indeed, the word “leadership” is generally assumed to imply a moral imperative. This discussion will explore the dark side, focusing on incompetence as well as evil, and sins of omission as well as commission.
Riley M. Sinder, Center for Public Leadership, Kennedy School, Harvard University

This discussion will focus on the evil side of men’s authority, and what women and men can do to neutralize the human nature that causes men to follow men into senseless battles. The evil side of male authority does not deal with reality, but deludes itself into dealing with life 250,000 years ago, back when the significant evolution of our human nature stopped. The discussion will deal with some modern ideas on how to get those who threaten us to deal with reality.

Ronald Heifetz, Center for Public Leadership, Kennedy School, Harvard University

Dr. Heifetz will focus the discussion on crisis leadership, in light of the events on September 11. He will examine the demands of crisis leadership in the acute/emergency phase and in the post-emergency phase. What are the expectations of authority figures, and how do those expectations determine the latitude they may have for action? What are the key strategic questions that Guiliani and Bush, from very different positions, need to be asking? What lessons can we learn so far from observing and participating in these historical events? The aim of the discussion will be to help develop a framework for crisis leadership that can be used in situations beyond the one we face today.

Robert House, Wharton School of Business, University of Pennsylvania

In the first round of discussions, Dr. House will address the challenges of cross-cultural leadership. Cultures vary widely with respect to who is considered a leader and what leaders try to accomplish. In a post-authoritative society, “leader” means “dictator.” In some societies, leaders are given wealth and adulation; in others leadership is a stigma. Consequently, in many countries, giving people authority and expecting them to take leadership is seen as a danger and is viewed with suspicion. We need to understand the differences between cultures if we are going to assist them.

Robert House, Wharton School of Business, University of Pennsylvania

In the second hour of discussion, Dr. House will investigate with participants the idea of strategic leadership. Strategic leadership is leadership of the total enterprise, either by individuals or by a top management team. The literature on leadership (with a few exceptions in the past ten years) has ignored this phenomenon. Little is known of how leadership at the top functions, relates to the extended environment, shapes the organization, and influences organizational culture. We need to get away from studying the leader-follower relationship and think as well about top management as strategic leadership.
Poster sessions will be set up Friday morning in the Monroe Prefunction area and will remain on display throughout the conference. Presenters will be available to discuss posters during Saturday's break; many will stay until 4:30. This year, for the first time, there will be a special section of posters highlighting leadership education programs.

LEAD: Leadership Education And Development

Brian MorganArmstrong, University of La Verne, California
Information and the Moral Work of Leaders (paper)
Joanne B. Ciulla, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond

Learn how access to information is changing the concept of leadership in the U.S. and the rest of the world. This presentation will begin by examining what philosophers have said about ethics and power. It will then examine a series of recent examples that illustrate how information is changing the expectations of followers and the work of leaders.

Spirituality as a Path of Attainment (workshop)
Judy L. Rogers, Department of Educational Leadership, Miami University
David A. Cowan, Department of Management, Miami University

The presenters will demonstrate approaches for incorporating the spiritual dimension in courses on business and educational leadership. Each presenter will share course syllabi and engage participants in course assignments used to teach students how to: 1) reflect deeply about critical issues, 2) envision constructive ways of leading and interacting in communities, and 3) translate such visions into responsible action.

Political Leadership: Historical and Contemporary Perspectives (panel)
Moderator: Lois T. Vietri, Department of Government and Politics, and Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

Spatial Leadership & Blame Avoidance in an Era of Failed Leaders
Michael Genovese, Loyola Marymount University

Working within a system of separate institutions with shared and overlapping powers, presidents are often frustrated in their attempts to achieve goals and blamed when they don’t “deliver” on their promises. As a result, they often engage in sophisticated “blame avoidance” strategies or “spatial leadership” to avoid responsibility for failures or disappointments.

Conflicting Interest and Common Ground: The Leadership Challenge in Modern Democracy
Kenneth P. Ruscio, Washington and Lee University

What is the fundamental leadership challenge in contemporary democracies? Finding common ground in the midst of competing and seemingly irreconcilable interests among citizens. This presentation examines the historical development of this challenge by discussing the writings of Montesquieu and Publilius, then moves to an examination of contemporary democratic theorists and the implications of their theories for leadership theory.

Room to Talk: A Comparison of Context in Medieval and U.S. Political Leadership
Tim H. Blessing, Alvernia College

This presentation compares the conditions in which the dialogues necessary for significant political leadership are most likely to occur. Using an interdisciplinary approach that combines statistical analysis, psychology, Medieval Studies and American history, this presentation demonstrates that transactional exchanges define significant leadership whether the leader is a sacral inherited kingship or chosen by a civil political process.
Building and Sustaining Consensual Interdependence: Ten Years of Leadership Education at Northwestern University (workshop)

Paul Arntson, Undergraduate Leadership Program, Northwestern University
Elvin Chan, Undergraduate Leadership Program, Northwestern University

This workshop will share, in an experiential way, the evolving goals of Northwestern’s leadership programs and the current means to achieve them. Presenters will stress that the key outcome, whether in institutional or community settings, is the ability to build and sustain consensual interdependence in problem-solving activities.

Linking the Academic and Practical for More Effective Leadership Training for Government Officials (workshop)

Achieving Learning, Growth and Change: A More Effective Leadership Development Model

Myrna L. Bair, Institute for Public Administration, University of Delaware
Kathryn Denhardt, Institute for Public Administration, University of Delaware
Audrey Helfman, Institute for Public Administration, University of Delaware

Presenters will demonstrate the critical elements of a leadership program for those in public service and other specialized fields, which are: 1) a linkage between the academic and the practical, 2) longitudinal development that ensures leadership skills are put into actual practice, and 3) a safe environment.

Leadership Development: Crossing the International Divide

John F. Ciccarelli, College of Management, University of Massachusetts Boston

Find out how one university integrated a leadership development program for a delegation of Chinese government and business officials into existing graduate programs. Participants will discuss the means used to fast track the cohort through an orientation program that readied them for coursework and field experiences, and efforts to ensure matriculated students gained from this unique opportunity to work with and learn from the delegation.

New Leaders for a New Century (panel)

Moderator: John Jacob Gardiner, Seattle University

The Meaning of Community Leadership as Experienced by Graduates of the Leadership Spokane Program

Matthew Chase, Eastern Washington University

Get an inside view of a phenomenological research effort undertaken during the fall of 2000 with recent graduates of the Leadership Spokane Program. Participants will learn about the purpose, methodology, results and implications of the study, plus gain valuable insight into the world of qualitative methodologies and their implications as tools for evaluation in community leadership education and development programs.

Emerging Leaders in Great Cities: Boston, A Case Study

Sherry H. Penney, College of Management, University of Massachusetts Boston

Find out about a new university-based leadership program for city leaders, designed to meet the leadership challenges and needs identified in a survey of 300 Boston-area business and community leaders. The program’s goals: 1) to diversify the pool of leaders over time to include more females and more persons of color, and 2) to equip emerging leaders with the skills they need to occupy major leadership positions in the future.
Energy Optimization: A New Frontier for Leadership? (workshop)

William P. Mease, Mease & Trudeau, Inc., St. Paul, Minneapolis
Kathleen E. Allen, University of St. Thomas

This session will focus on the nature of energy in organizations and the leader’s role in maximizing positive energy toward effective systems change.

Youth Leadership Development (panel)

Moderator: Marie Cini, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

Youth Community Leadership Training: The Building of the Bedrock of “Hong Kong People Ruling Hong Kong” After 1997
James Hon-fai Mok, The Hong Kong Federation of Youth Groups - Leadership 21, Hong Kong
Joanna Chung-yan Cheung, The Hong Kong Federation of Youth Groups - Leadership 21, Hong Kong

Since 1997, Hong Kong (HK) has been enjoying high degree of autonomy under China’s sovereignty – a political reality captured in the catch-phrase “HK People Ruling HK.” Since then, youth community leadership development has become more vital than ever in the local political agenda. Learn from the first-hand experiences of two young people, who say such training helps nurture youth civic participation and political development in general.

Designing and Implementing Youth Leadership Programs for Hispanic Youth

Elizabeth Lewis-Brooks, J.W. Fanning Institute for Leadership, University of Georgia

The J.W. Fanning Institute for Leadership at the University of Georgia assists in developing youth leadership programs. In the summer of 2000, the Institute implemented a youth leadership program with a group of Hispanic boys in a low-income community of migrant workers in Athens, Georgia. Get the details, along with information about other programs with specific youth audiences.

A Comprehensive Leadership Education Model to Train, Teach and Develop Leadership in Youth

John C. Ricketts, Department of Agricultural Education and Communication, University of Florida
Rick Rudd, Department of Agricultural Education and Communication, University of Florida

Presenters will discuss key components of their model for youth leadership education, including (1) leadership knowledge and information; (2) leadership attitude, will, and desire; (3) decision making, reasoning and critical thinking skills; (4) inter- and intrapersonal relations; and (5) oral and written communication skills.
“As Strange a Maze as e’er Men Trod”: Toward a History of Leadership Studies and its Relevance for Scholars, Practitioners and Educators (paper)

Georgia Sorenson, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland
William Howe, Center for Leadership, National University

What is Leadership Studies? How did it emerge? How has it evolved? Is it a distinct, coherent enterprise? Using interviews with influential scholars, leaders and educators, along with several perspectives on how knowledge develops, this session wrestles with the history and identity of this “strange maze.” Conference members can help discover and contribute to the Ariadne’s thread through our shared history.

Subversive Models and Abusive Models: Peter Sellars’s Interpretation of Mozart’s ‘Marriage of Figaro’ (paper)

Barbara R. Barry, Center for Public Leadership, Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University

Peter Sellars’s direction of the three Mozart operas, with libretti by Lorenzo da Ponte, caused a storm of controversy over a range of issues—distortion, flagrant contradiction of textual meaning, and a production style that violated the composer’s intentions. This presentation will examine how “The Marriage of Figaro,” Mozart’s revolutionary comic opera, is subverted in Sellars’s version, so that medium, message, and metaphor are all given different meanings from the original, meanings that distort the work’s fundamental leadership themes.

Valuing and Developing Leadership Skills in Multicultural Contexts (workshop)

Learning to Lead: Preparing Leaders from Underrepresented Groups
Nereida Avendaño, Cross-Cultural Educational Programs, Western Illinois University

This session will describe WIU’s Learning to Lead Program, a comprehensive academic support program that can be easily adapted for other institutions. The presentation will provide strategies on developing a leadership program that will prepare students of color to be leaders, to become more effective voices at all levels of decision making, and to serve as role models.

Preparing for Leadership in a Multicultural Context
Bonnie Pribush, The Leadership Program, Franklin College

The challenge to lead becomes especially complex when followers do not share the same cultural beliefs and assumptions. This workshop reports on a course developed by professors from seven different cultural backgrounds. The course was enhanced with video-conferencing and virtual world technology to provide students with cross-cultural skills as well as cultural and leadership knowledge.
Empowering Deaf Communities in Developing Nations (panel)

Cristina Berdichevsky, Foreign Language Department, Gallaudet University
Andrea Shettle, Social Work Department, Gallaudet University

Since 1864, Gallaudet University, the world’s only four-year liberal-arts university for the deaf, has been committed to making a difference in the lives of deaf individuals. This session will focus on two strategies, a listserv and a partnership, that have proven effective in empowering deaf communities in developing nations and in internationalizing deaf education in the U.S.

From Values to Performance: Theory, Practice and Implications (panel)

Moderator: Christian Resick, Psychology Department, Wayne State University
Scot Bemis, Department of Behavioral Science and Leadership, U.S. Military Academy
Greg Dardis, Department of Behavioral Science and Leadership, U.S. Military Academy
Marcus Dickson, Department of Psychology, Wayne State University
Brent Smith, Jones Graduate School of Management, Rice University
Paul Hanges, Department of Psychology, University of Maryland

This panel will bring together an eclectic group of academics and practitioners to discuss potential theoretical frameworks underlying a values/ethics-to-performance model and the role that values-based leadership might play in it. Panelists will discuss how such a perspective could be applied as both scientific research and organizational practice.

Cross-cultural Complexity and Charismatic Leaders: Micro and Macro Perspectives of Information Processing (panel)

Moderator: Carol Fimmen, College of Business and Technology, Western Illinois University

Information Processing Models and Attribution of Charismatic Leadership: A Cross-cultural Study
Susan Murphy, Kravis Leadership Institute, Claremont McKenna College

The presenter studied cross-cultural variations in information processing models and their effects on the attribution of charismatic leadership. The results indicate that, in collectivistic societies, leaders’ prototypical characteristics are more effective in forming a leadership impression than basic factual outcomes. In contrast, individualistic people attribute charismatic qualities to leaders based on outcomes of events.

Cross-cultural Complexity and the Impact on Feedback-seeking Behavior: Implications for Leadership in the U.S. and Peru
Mary F. Sully de Luque, GLOBE Leadership Project, The Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania

The presenter discovered that universal and contingent cultural characteristics influence leadership practices across regional boundaries. Her study couples this information with findings on how people seek information.
The Courage to Lead (workshop)

Michael Jones, Pianoscapes, Canada
Judy Sorum Brown, poet/leadership educator

How does the nature of creative practice serve as a metaphor and discipline for sustaining leadership? What are the ways in which, by claiming our own gifts and naming them in others, we can experience more sustainable steady and focused energies in the face of the considerable challenges of our time?

Psychological and Existential Roots of Leadership: Building on the Work of Ernest Becker and Otto Rank (panel)

Jean Lipman-Bluman, Peter F. Drucker School of Management, Claremont Graduate University
Daniel Liechty, Graduate School of Social Work, Illinois State University
Sheldon Solomon, Psychology Department, Brooklyn College
Robert Kramer, School of Public Affairs, American University

This panel examines how the work of Ernest Becker and Otto Rank informs leadership issues. Topics will include the role of transference in selecting leadership, the psychodynamic underpinnings of leadership and followership, the achievement ethic and the dread of mortality, and the anxiety of leaders in government.

Meeting the Challenges of Collaboration to Strengthen Leadership Development (workshop)

Carol H. Sawyer, Department of Organizational Leadership, University of La Verne
Brian MorganArmstrong, University of La Verne
Ronald E. Riggio, Kravis Leadership Institute, Claremont McKenna College
Georgia Sorenson, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

This hands-on workshop provides an opportunity to assess and design collaborative approaches for leadership development, using ideas from two books on collaboration and on collaborative leadership (one by James Austin of the Harvard Business School and another by David Chrislip and Carl Larson), along with ideas offered by Warren Bennis and Mel Roman at a recent meeting of the Cape Cod Institute.

Using the Simulation, “Neighborhood,” to Teach Citizen-Leadership (workshop)

Sandra Kolankiewicz, McDonough Center for Leadership and Business, Marietta College
Stephen W. Schwartz, McDonough Center for Leadership and Business, Marietta College
Gamaliel Perruci, McDonogh Center for Leadership and Business, Marietta College

How can leadership educators make theory meaningful for students with limited experiences? Faculty members at Marietta College’s McDonough Program have written a simulation designed to meet the challenge. This session will explain the simulation and relate it to major themes developed in first-year leadership courses. Participants will discuss the viability of simulations as a teaching technique.
Employees in health care delivery systems are in the midst of a paradigm shift as they work to deliver quality care in a cost-effective manner. What transformations will be required of health care leaders to ensure success? This session will explore various perspectives on effective health care leadership. Participant interaction and dialogue will be encouraged.

The United States is in love with the concept and practice of leadership. The individual leader is seen as a cultural hero. Academic leadership programs and leadership development activities are growth industries. This session will lay bare some of the historical, religious, economic and cultural roots of this “romance with leadership.” Moreover, it will highlight the inherent risks of this “romance” for the long-term vitality of U.S. democracy.

This presenter will analyze the significance of increasing religious diversity in the U.S. for leadership in politics and the workplace. He will explain his framework of “respectful pluralism,” an alternative to either the privatization of religion or a coercive role for religion. And he will explain how political and business leaders (and followers) can negotiate religion in its multiple institutional and personal expressions.

This workshop will provide a demonstration of the Online Leadership Assessment Program, an innovative program designed for managers interested in developing their leadership skills through a comprehensive analysis of their leadership style and behaviors, including an individual coaching session—all accomplished from a distance.
Assessing the New Leadership Process: A Starting Point (panel)

Paul Arsenault, West Chester University
Curtis L. Brungardt, Fort Hayes State University
Karl Kuhnert, Fanning Institute for Leadership, University of Georgia
Gregory Dardis, Department of Behavioral Science and Leadership, U.S. Military Academy
Claire Reinelt, Development Guild/DDI, Brookline, Massachusetts

This discussion will focus on appropriate leadership assessment theories and instruments and the ability to integrate the two into an evaluation process to meet the requirements of the new leadership process. Participants will share information on how to accomplish this goal.

Virtue Ethics and Servant Leadership: Making Connections (paper)

Mary Sue Brookshire, Center for Ethics, Emory University

Servant leadership has become increasingly popular in the corporate world, used by many of Fortune magazine’s “Best Companies to Work for in America.” How does one translate servant leadership into the context of higher education? This presenter argues that virtue ethics can help leaders better understand servant leadership and can provide rich linguistic, literary and historical resources for designing leadership programs.

Women’s Political Participation in Africa (panel)

Moderator: Kisuk Cho, Ewha Women’s University, South Korea

Enhancing Women’s Leadership
Nkechi Nwankwo, Women’s Leadership Group, Nigeria

The Women’s Leadership Group, an NGO in Nigeria, is joining with the mass media to give voice and skills to women and other disadvantaged groups and thereby raise a crop of new leaders. Made up of senior journalists and political analysts, the WLG seeks out potential female leaders, offers them practical hands-on media training and links them with media practitioners to prepare them to compete for and win elective and decision-making positions.

Retreating, Retooling and Advancing: Sustaining Women’s Leadership in Post Apartheid South Africa
Zola Makosana, Desmond Tutu Peace Center, South Africa
Glenda Wildshut, Desmond Tutu Leadership Academy, South Africa

This presentation explores the experiences of women in leadership positions cross-sectorally in two provinces in Gauteng and Western Cape in South Africa. The study explores how a select group of women—participants in two workshops run by the Desmond Tutu Leadership Academy—managed to obtain and retain their current leadership positions in post-apartheid South Africa.
Teaching Spiritual Synchronicity in Business Leadership (workshop)

Dean Pielstick, Northern Arizona University

Business leaders are increasingly interested in personal spiritual growth. They want to bring their whole self to work and to find meaning in that work. This workshop demonstrates how the role of spiritual synchronicity at work is being addressed in a business leadership course at a public university. Participants will be invited to share their own related experiences.

Coaching Culturally Diverse Leaders (workshop)

I. Marlene Thorn, Human Resources Department, International Monetary Fund, Washington, DC
Christine Kamunye, Human Resources Department, International Monetary Fund, Kenya

This presentation will provide information on how coaching activities and skills are implemented with culturally diverse managers in a multicultural organization, the International Monetary Fund. While some programs are targeted at problem managers, this presentation will present a model that emphasizes the importance of coaching as a service for all leaders.

Leadership Style and the Professional Development Practices of Secondary Teachers (paper)

Mary A. Persico, Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, Scranton, Pennsylvania

A study of 1,001 teachers and 125 secondary principals indicates that transformational leadership is predictive of strong professional development practices among teachers, especially those who are between the ages of 40 and 49 and those who have been with the same principal between one and five years.

Reflective Leadership (roundtable)

Barbara C. Crosby, Humphrey Institute of Public Affairs, University of Minnesota

Participants will explore the use of structured reflection in leadership development. Everyone will receive a working paper describing the Reflective Leadership Center’s use of reflection and analyzing reflection’s role in creating learning organizations and communities. Discussion will center on best practices, tension points participants have encountered in promoting the habit of reflection, and strategies for coping with these tension points.

The Middle Ground - TransformActional Leadership (paper)

David Bugay, Oakland Community College

TransformActional Leadership is the middle ground between the two extremes of transactional and transformational leadership styles. Each extreme identifies specific characteristics of leadership that appear different in description but often overlap in practice. This middle ground between the two leadership styles is where many leaders reside. It is truly a blend of both styles—transactional and transformational—thus it becomes TransformActional.
Teaching Leadership Online: An International Perspective (panel)

Teaching Leadership Online in a Global Classroom
Michael Hackman, Department of Communication, University of Colorado-Columbia Springs

Learn more about an international online curriculum in Organizational Communication and Leadership developed by the University of Colorado-Columbia Springs (USA), Southwest Texas State University (USA), the University of Siena (Italy), and the University of Vienna (Austria). This session will focus on the content and e-delivery platform used in a course titled, “Leadership Communication in the Global Environment.”

Innovation in Global Distance Education: The Operation Impact Story
Grace Preedy Barnes, Department of College Student Affairs and Leadership Studies, Azusa Pacific University

This evaluation of the Operation Impact Program, a graduate degree program offered worldwide at up to 21 locations in an intensive format with an online component, will emphasize its exciting 27-year history, challenges, and the current status of a distance education program developed long before distance education was “hot.”

It’s a Virtual World, After All
Marie A. Cini, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

This presenter will explore the synergies between contemporary leadership models and online education, with a particular emphasis on international perspectives.

Leading in Transcultural Environments (workshop)
Anne M. Ferrante, University of Texas at Dallas

Are leadership practices developed in one context applicable in a transcultural context? This workshop uncovers the complexity of transcultural work environments and presents a model to assess the applicability of transferring leadership concepts and practices.

Profiles of Community Leadership Programs (panel)

Moderator: Carolyn Humphrey, J.W. Fanning Institute for Leadership, University of Georgia

Local Issues, Regional Learning
Doug Jackson, Great Valley Center, Modesto, California
Francisco Mireles, Great Valley Center, Modesto, California

The Institute for the Development of Emerging Area Leaders (IDEAL) is creating a network of community leaders in the 18 counties of California’s Central Valley. Providing training and support to foster elected leadership that better reflects the region’s diversity, IDEAL convenes participants diverse in ethnicity, background, age, education level and ideology to study issues important to the region’s future.
Building An Inclusive Miami
Kristopher Smith, National Conference for Community and Justice, Miami
James Howe, National Conference for Community and Justice, Miami

Building an Inclusive Miami is an effort to engage residents of Miami and Miami-Dade County in a process of community transformation by developing skilled change agents who work to eliminate barriers to success.

Growing Leadership Circles for Rotary’s Emergent Future
John Jacob Gardiner, Seattle University

A professor of educational leadership reviews the Rotary International’s proposed leadership plan for the 21st century and discusses a new vision for the organization to maximize contributions of individual club members, a new role for the district governor, and strategies for implementing the plan in each district.

Country-Specific Findings from the GLOBE Research Program (panel)
Moderator: Robert House, GLOBE, The Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania

Leadership Styles in Bolivia
David Beveridge, College of Business and Technology, Western Illinois University

This presentation focuses on Bolivian culture and leadership, including initial findings from the GLOBE study and a comparison of middle managers in the finance, telecommunications, and food-processing industries.

Leadership in Britain: Implications of the GLOBE Study
Simon A. Booth, Department of Management, School of Business, Reading University, UK

Are differing models of outstanding leaders characteristic only of middle-level managers, or do they have resonance in the wider population? Answers will be found in the results and analysis of a survey of students conducted in Britain.

Iranian Culture and Leadership
Mansour Javidan, University of Calgary, Canada

A look at the GLOBE findings on the nine dimensions of Iranian culture and the attributes of effective leadership in Iran. The relationship between Iranian culture and the unique attributes of effective leadership in Iran will be explored.

The Ethical Implications of Modern Leadership Theory (panel)
Moderator: Nance Lucas, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

The Ethical Difference: Why Leaders are More Than Managers
Joseph Potts, Director, International Student and Scholar Services, University of Kansas

Theorists have wrestled with the difference between managing and leading for decades, but until now none have located that difference squarely and exclusively in the domain of ethics. The meaningful, purposeful essence of leadership is clearly seen only when contrasted with the morally neutral, non-ethical, survival-oriented nature of management. This session summarizes a new book by the same title.

Bass and the Ethics of Authentic Transformational Leadership

Terry L. Price, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond

Bernard Bass distinguishes between authentic transformational leadership and inauthentic or pseudo-transformational leadership. This presentation analyzes the conception of authenticity at the core of Bass's normative account of leadership and argues that the distinction between authentic transformational leadership and pseudo-transformational leadership fails to ground a response to ethical concerns about transformational leadership.

Leadership and Values: Creating Sustainable Change Through Collaboration (workshop)

Bernice M. Ledbetter, Ledbetter Consulting Group, Pasadena, California

By presenting a theory-in-use model, this session seeks to build a bridge between those who theorize about leadership and those who practice it. An integrative leadership model will be presented, identifying values as the key element in creating sustainable social and organizational change. The intersection of leadership, values, collaboration and change will be explored to identify a working model for sustainable change.

Industry and Education—Partnering to Improve Leadership Effectiveness (paper)

Mary B. Breckenridge, Mercyhurst College
Bruce T. Murphy, Organizational Leadership Program, Mercyhurst College

Representatives from Lord Corporation, a manufacturing facility, and Mercyhurst College, a Catholic institution in the liberal arts tradition, will present a descriptive analysis of a multi-faceted partnership that has enhanced leadership development and education at both organizations.

Leadership and Culture (panel)

Moderator: Nadyne Guzman, College of Education, University of Colorado at Colorado Springs

Comparing the Effectiveness of Culture-focused and Individual-focused Leadership Practices at the Executive Level of Organizations

Robert E. Colvin, Christopher Newport University

Popular literature seems to suggest that effective executives need to focus their leadership practices simultaneously on (1) culture-building/vision-setting, and (2) developing, coaching and mentoring individual followers. Is one of these two areas more important than the other for eliciting extra effort and support from followers? Attend this session and find out.
Strategic Cross-Cultural Leadership in Transnational Projects
Victor Sohmen, School of Business & Economics, Umea University, Sweden

This is a theoretical study of strategic cross-cultural leadership (CCL) in transnational projects that are being relentlessly spawned by multinational enterprises. It develops a framework for empirical research based on three contemporary theories of leadership: connective, transformational and servant.

What Leaders Should Do to Coordinate Decentralized Organizations
Suck-Chul Yoon, College of Business Administration, Seoul National University, Korea

What are leaders supposed to do to coordinate their decentralized organizations? The concept of coordination is analyzed in terms of total vs. partial optimization. Examples for discussion include former chairman Jack Welch of General Electric and ex-President Chung-Hee Park of Korea.

Images of Leadership: The Ethics of Impression Management (panel)
Moderator: Joanne B. Ciulla, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond

Seeming to Be Real: The Leader as Image
Nathan Harter, Department of Organizational Leadership, Purdue University

Impression management raises ethical issues about appearances in wielding or using power. This session describes impression management and responds to three objections: 1) that impression management diminishes the role of the follower, presupposing the follower to be a dupe or stooge; 2) that impression management encourages deception; and 3) that impression management treats followers as objects to be manipulated, rather than as rational, autonomous subjects.

Contesting Images: Shakespeare on Leadership and the Struggle for Identity
Michael Harvey, Department of Business Management, Washington College

In “Hamlet” and “Henry V,” Shakespeare explores how politics pushes leaders to reshape their identities into more public and strategically deployed selves, and he weighs the possible costs of this transformation. For better or worse, the management of identity emerges as crucial to the ruler’s art.

Applying Impression Management: Gaining Trust, Using Caution
Taggart Smith, Department of Organizational Leadership, Purdue University

Leaders are watched for clues about priorities, values, and direction. Some suspect impression management as insincerely playing a role. How does impression management influence others? How else can leaders establish credibility? This presentation reflects on the impact of behavioral choices on followers by asking how leaders can reflect their true feelings and establish credibility.
Leadership and Creating Organizational Buoyancy: Resurfacing After Being Plunged into Sudden Disaster (workshop)

Edward E. Hampton, Performance Perspectives, Oviedo, Florida

Participants will gain perspective on shaping and developing leadership to deal with times of crisis and turmoil by exploring various models and chaos theory thru the lenses of vision, stakeholders, and communications. This session will seek to understand how leadership can provide a potent force to help with the human anxiety and suffering that often emerges with sudden disaster.

Leadership and Democratization (panel)

The Political Leadership of President Kim Dae Jung: Transforming and Liberal?
Dong-Jin Jang, Department of Political Science, Yonsei University, Korea
Man Kwon Kim, Department of Political Science, Yonsei University, Korea

The presenters will analyze the dilemma presented by President Kim Dae Jung’s political leadership in Korea. Since the recent economic crisis, external conditions require transforming, liberal reform, while internal conditions demand transactional and communitarian efforts. Bowing to strong internal demands, Kim has adopted a transactional, liberal leadership style, which this presenter will argue is the right choice for the Korean people.

Presidential Leadership in Brazil’s Democratic Consolidation
Gamaliel Perruci, McDonough Center for Leadership and Business, Marietta College
Stephen W. Schwartz, McDonough Center for Leadership and Business, Marietta College
Sandra Kolankiewicz, McDonough Center for Leadership and Business, Marietta College

Since Brazil’s return to civilian rule in 1985, the country has struggled to consolidate democratic rule. Presidential leadership has become a central theme in this debate about democratization. This presenter will examine recent civilian presidents, with a particular focus on current President Fernando Henrique Cardoso, and conclude that presidential leadership in Brazil is far from institutionalized as personal styles of leadership continue to plague the political system.

Putin’s Leadership in Russia: Toward Authoritarianism or Democracy?
Mark Walker, School of International Service, American University

To resolve its historical antagonism between authoritarian rule and democracy, Russia must decide to identify either with the West or strike out again on its own. This paper will discuss the essential role President Vladimir Putin will play in Russia’s future.

Chaos Theory and Leadership Studies: Can We Teach This Stuff? (roundtable)

John (Jack) S. Burns, Whitworth College

What are successful strategies for teaching chaos theory and leadership? This roundtable discussion is for those who are teaching or planning to teach about chaos theory and leadership. Together we will learn about what is being taught in this new theoretical arena, share the materials and experiences that are proving useful, and discuss the problems that have arisen.
CONCURRENT SESSION #5, SATURDAY 1:30 PM – 3:00 PM

Saturday, 1:30 pm - 3:00 pm

Brickell South

Developing Youth Leaders Abroad (panel)

Moderator: Elizabeth McGovern, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

Gallaudet University’s Study Abroad Program to Costa Rica

Cristina Berdichevsky, Foreign Language Department, Gallaudet University

Andrea Shettle, Social Work Department, Gallaudet University

International Internships for Deaf College Students is a unique educational exchange program that provides a semester internship experience in Costa Rica for American deaf students and a semester's study and summer teaching practice at Gallaudet for Costa Rican deaf students.

Global Leadership: Bringing Together Students From Around the World

Heather McDougall, Vision Resource Centre, Indiana University

What is “global leadership” and how can it be taught to students from diverse countries and cultures? This presentation examines the concept of global leadership and the process of creating an international leadership program in Eastern Europe. It will include suggestions on how to structure a program for students from around the world and how to merge academics, community service, and cultural awareness.

Leadership London: A Multicultural Leadership Development Experience

Vernon A. Wall, Iowa State University

John Shertzer, Iowa State University

Iowa State University students from diverse backgrounds are given the opportunity to investigate how the concept of leadership is viewed in another country. Participants will learn how this program was started and what is included in the curriculum.

Saturday, 1:30 pm - 3:00 pm

Brickell Prefunction

Global Leadership After September 11: Insights on the Core Issues of Transatlantic Leadership (panel)

Franck Biancheri, TIESWEB, France

John Van Oudenaren, European Affairs Department, Library of Congress

Adrian Taylor, Think Tools A.G., Zurich, Switzerland

Brian Murphy, European Union Center of the University System of Georgia

In our global society, all problems and issues interact without any efficient political or institutional regulatory framework. Panelists will tackle the complex question of global leadership by looking first at the issues surrounding transatlantic leadership.

Developing the Self-Motivation to Take the Lead (workshop)

Fran Kick, Instruction & Design Concepts, Centerville, Ohio

This upbeat, high-energy, positively enthusiastic program explores what it takes to develop the intrinsic drive to take the lead. Using an up-on-your-feet interactive presentation, the session is designed to create an increased awareness of how to bridge the gap between the theory of self-motivation and the practice of personal leadership.
New Ways to Understand and Support Community Leadership (panel)

Marian S. Krauskopf, Ford Foundation, New York
Laura M. Chambers, Advocacy Institute, Washington, DC
Bethany Godsoe, Robert F. Wagner School of Public Service, New York University
Phill Wilson, 2001 LCW Award Winner, African American AIDS Policy & Training Institute, Los Angeles, California

In this panel, partners from the Leadership for a Changing World award program will discuss what makes their program distinctive—its concept of leadership, outreach, leadership support structure, and focus on networking. The discussion will also cover the use of collaborative research as a developmental tool for leaders, offering a critical opportunity for reflective work.

Campus and Community Partnerships for Social Analysis and Problem Solving (paper)

Richard A. Couto, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond

Evidence abounds that a community-based, problem-centered pedagogy is necessary for a leadership curriculum. Participatory action research provides this pedagogy and brings universities to an improved role in the civic infrastructure of their communities. Several specific projects will be examined for their content and the pedagogical guidance they provide.

Self-Monitoring: Impact on Emerging Leaders in Chinese and American Contexts (panel)

Kathleen Campbell, U.S. Military Academy
Donald Campbell, U.S. Military Academy
Greg Dardis, U.S. Military Academy
Scot Bemis, U.S. Military Academy

This panel will explore Chinese and American leadership, focusing on self-monitoring, the adjustment of one’s behavior to meet the demands of individual situations and/or the expectations of others. Presenters will contrast self-monitoring and emerging leadership among Chinese-Singaporean and American young adults.

Leadership in Applying Information and Communication Technology in Education: The Asian Experience (panel)

Philip Hui, The Hong Kong Institute of Education, PRC
Yidan Wang, Asian Development Bank Institute, Japan
Victor Sze Kuen Lee, School of Continuous Studies of the Chinese University of Hong Kong

Panelists will discuss opportunities, challenges, and dilemmas in forming partnerships to address the challenges in applying ICT in education. They will also address the importance of strong leadership required in this process and in the context of the Asian experience.
Commitment and Context: Two Approaches to Non-Hierarchical Leadership Development and a Response from the Field (panel)

Nancy S. Huber, University of Arizona
Lynda McDermott, EquiPro International, New York
Dennis C. Roberts, Miami University of Oxford, Ohio

It is important for college students to know that leadership is not reserved for the few elected and titled leaders on campus. Two presenters will describe how their different universities prepare students for effective leadership in the community or at work. Additionally, a business consultant will discuss the efficacy of higher education’s response in today’s changing global environment.

Invisible Leadership (paper)

Gill Hickman, Jepson School of Leadership, University of Richmond
Georgia Sorenson, Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland

Some of the most adept leadership is invisible. Profound, this kind of leadership goes unnoticed, unmeasured, or unacknowledged—yet great change occurs. Components of invisible leadership include commitment to the great public values, empathy for and trust in others, and the lack of need for personal credit. Invisible leadership may have unintended costs—some surprising—that presenters will discuss.

The Leader as Futurist and Visionary (paper)

Stephen C. Harper, Department of Management and Marketing, University of North Carolina at Wilmington

The accelerating, multifaceted, and discontinuous nature of change place a premium on having the ability to sense what may be over the horizon. Leaders who can position their organizations to capitalize on emerging opportunities, as well as minimize or eliminate potential threats, will be worth their weight in gold. Leaders who lack “anticipatory” skills are destined to be blind-sided by external forces that could jeopardize the organization’s very existence.

Development of a Questionnaire to Measure Leadership Ethics (roundtable)

Peter G. Northouse, Department of Communication, Western Michigan University

At this session, researchers, trainers, and consultants interested in assessing ethical leadership will discuss issues surrounding the development of a leadership ethics questionnaire. The questionnaire is based on a broad range of ethical theories (i.e., utilitarianism, egoism, altruism, duty, virtue, caring, honesty, and justice) and focuses on ethical leadership styles.

Co-producing Knowledge: Practitioners and Academics Working Together to Understand Leadership (roundtable)

Sonia Ospina, R.F. Wagner Graduate School of Public Service, New York University
Richard Couto, Jepson School of Leadership Studies, University of Richmond

How can academics and practitioners work together to generate knowledge relevant to both? Presenters will discuss a research design based on action-research methodologies that can co-produce valid and credible practice-based knowledge and that also brings new voices and innovative insights about the theory and practice of leadership.
Ethical Leadership and Laws of Power (roundtable)

Tony Middlebrooks, Cardinal Stritch University

This roundtable examines the ethical challenges raised by the conscious and unconscious application of Laws of Power, specific behaviors intended to empower one to influence others while masking that intent. Participants will examine the Laws of Power, their role in leadership activity, and the ethical dilemmas prompted by their use.

Proposals for the Leadership That Can Bring Actual Peace to Ireland (paper)

Hugh O’Doherty, Center for Public Leadership, Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University

Third-party mediators left Ireland when a peace agreement was signed, and the world applauded too early. Now the world has abandoned Northern Ireland, not knowing what to do. This session presents data suggesting that parties don’t begin the real work of peace making until after the agreement is signed, then proposes innovative, post-agreement roles for third parties.

Applying Leadership Theory (panel)

Moderator: Tracey T. Manning, Department of Psychology, College of Notre Dame of Maryland

Transformational Leadership Predicts Leader Performance in West Point Cadets

Paul T. Bartone, U.S. Military Academy
Gregory Dardis, Department of Behavioral Science and Leadership, U.S. Military Academy

An examination of the predictive value of transformational leadership style, as perceived and rated by subordinates, on the actual performance of cadet leaders at the U.S. Military Academy. Rated transformational leadership is correlated with military performance grades achieved during the senior year. These results demonstrate that leaders who are perceived as transformational by subordinates also perform more effectively in their leader roles, based on external criteria.

Leadership & Personality: Research Pitfalls in Search of a Relation

Karl Kuhnert, Department of Psychology, University of Georgia

Researchers have spent the past fifty years attempting to support the argument that leadership can be explained to some extent by the personality of the leader. Despite some success, the results of this research have been inconsistent and equivocal. This presentation will show researchers, practitioners, and students how to minimize or overcome these methodological obstacles, and provide suggestions and guidelines for future research on leadership.

Waking Up IBM: The Distinction Between Leadership and Authority (workshop)

Riley M. Sinder, Center for Public Leadership, Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University

Engineer Grossman demonstrated leadership without authority when he walked into IBM headquarters unattended, wearing “a programmer’s uniform of khakis and an open-necked shirt,” to show top managers where they had missed the boat in planning IBM’s business. To get maximum benefit from this experiential workshop, you should read first the article, “Waking Up IBM,” available free at the book fair tables.

The International Leadership Association (ILA) serves as a global network for all those with a professional interest in leadership.

ILA brings together public and private sector leaders, scholars, leadership educators and organizational development professionals from around the world to share information, resources and methods, while developing a deeper understanding of effective leadership.

At each annual conference, ILA works to:

- Build bridges among leadership scholars, educators and practitioners for the purpose of generating new ideas and practices in the field of leadership,
- Disseminate cutting-edge work in leadership theory and practice, and
- Further legitimize the study of leadership.
